In the past, membership to the American Legion was limited to individuals who had served in the military during specific times of service when the U.S. Congress had declared hostilities in which U.S. military personnel were activated. There were at least 12 known combat operations that required activation of our military personnel in which resulted in approximately 1,600 U.S. military men and women casualties, but were prevented from joining the American Legion.

This ruling was changed in 2018 and now has been extended to include all U.S. military personnel who served on active duty during these hostile conflicts. It has been classified as "Other Conflicts" to include the Cold War which is represented in the dates from the end of WWII through to today.
